

ENERGY RISK ANALYST

Job Announcement Number 058008

Open Until Filled

Annual Salary Range: DOQ

Tacoma Power is seeking an energetic problem solver ready to apply advanced quantitative skills to the position of Energy Risk Analyst. The duties of this position include: performing statistical and mathematical calculations in pursuit of asset valuation, operational and market risk assessment, and portfolio optimization. Candidates should expect to work in a results oriented environment where the quantitative analysis they provide will form the basis of important strategic decisions. This role will interface with a diverse group of professionals charged with the operation of Tacoma Power's supply portfolio. This is an excellent opportunity for skilled quantitative analysts looking to gain experience in the energy or utility industry.

Tacoma Power is a public electric utility that provides its employees with health, dental and vision benefits, paid holidays and personal time off, and participation in Tacoma's Employee's Retirement System.

Desired Qualifications

The ideal candidate has an advanced degree in a quantitative field of study such as Economics, Engineering, Mathematics, Statistics or Finance. It is preferred but not essential that the candidate have previous energy industry or utility experience. Creativity, dedication, and the ability to think and converse clearly about complex statistical or mathematical concepts are assets. Previous experience with risk analysis and portfolio modeling is also valued. To flourish at Tacoma Power, the candidate should prefer to work in a cooperative, team-oriented environment. Experience with the following programs is appreciated; SAS, Crystal Ball, Aurora XMP, VISTA, and advanced use of the Microsoft Office Suite including VBA and SQL.
